Dispatch Center, Radio System Set To Go

By Lou Marzeles

Work is nearing completion on the new emergency services system for Klickitat County, with the dispatch center on S. Columbus set to have equipment installed, weeks and millions of dollars over budget.

County Emergency Services director Ed Powell says everything looks good for meeting the deadline for having the new system in place.

"We had some setbacks in completion of the building," Powell says, "but they've given us permission to go ahead and start installing some of the equipment we need to install to meet our deadline."

That deadline is Dec. 16. Federal policies require counties to go a new short-band radio system as of Dec. 31.

"We're scheduled to move in Dec. 16," Powell says. "That's when we anticipate to walk over, sit down, and use the equipment. That includes being trained, so it's pretty close."

Powell says his department plans to hold an open house at the new center on Dec. 10 from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m.

Motorola consoles will go into the center within days, with dispatchers-presently holed up adjacent to the county jail-dearly anticipating their move.

Powell says the budget for the entire system came out to about $7 million, with the building itself costing $2.3 million, considerably higher than its initial forecast cost of $1.6 million. The total system project had been initially estimated at around $4 million. Some of the equipment costs may be reimbursed through state 911 funding.

Powell says some of the budget increases are because of additional sites for emergency radio towers. "It started out with just a couple of sites and we added some more," he says, "which adds probably six or seven hundred thousand dollars per site. Anytime you add a site, you have to do that construction and building, as well as obtaining license and permits. It's probably around $700,000 dollars a mountain top."

On Oct. 1 Powell requested a supplemental budget. Part of the issue, he points out, was that there were two county departments responsible for the rollout of the radio system, his and Public Works. Public Works had point on the 911 center building, "even though I was the project manager of the whole project," Powell says. "I'm not an engineer." Powell left engineering matters to the appropriate department. But because neither department expected to put in the budget for the building, its construction was left out of the budget altogether. "The whole building wasn't included in the budget," Powell recalls. "So we had to go back to the commissioners to ask for a supplemental budget to put the cost for the building back in the budget so we could draw off of it." Powell says it was his experience in past budgetary dealings that such work would come out of the general fund, and he was new to Klickitat County.

The federal mandate to go to narrow band radio frequency works out well for the county, Powell indicates, since it is able to hit the ground running with all-digital equipment, which is requisite to carry narrow band signals. "Klickitat County is very fortunate in building a radio system right at this particular time," he says. "I think this is one of the reasons they did it."

Narrow band frequencies allow the FCC to issue more frequency usage, since they take up less bandwidth, but at the same time the range of narrow band frequencies is much shorter than wide band, meaning there is a need for more towers to carry signals further. The change in bandwidth is set by the FCC; local governments have no control over that. Klickitat County is already well positioned to accommodate the change.

"We'll have everything covered," Powell says. "This was projected by the engineering firm that we hired to have this much coverage in narrow band. We should be all right."

Asked about the cost increases for the dispatch center, Powell says he can't speak fully to the issues involved. "Our engineering firm we hired to design the system also designed the building and everything inside," he says. "It was a shock to all of us in the county that it went so much over bid. I don't believe anyone from the county understands why the building cost more than anticipated, but I do know the county has tried to do everything they can to cut costs where they can." Powell says one reason why costs are so much higher also is because the county is required to follow Davis Beacon rules on paying prevailing wages. That policy typically adds significantly to per-hour costs for labor. But he adds, "I want you to give the commissioners a pat on the back for funding all of this. They don't just hand out money. You have to have a very valid reason for them to hand money out. And this is one of the biggest projects in Klickitat County, and they only did it because the community needs it."

Book Review by Judy Bane

“How To Bake A Better Life”

by Barbara O'Neal was a well put together heart warmer of a story.

Ramona Gallagher is working hard to make her dream of owning her own bakery come true. She has broken away from her family's well established restaurant business to go it on her own and is fighting to build her business without their support. She is one broken hot water heater away from disaster.

When her pregnant daughters soldier husband is badly wounded and she has to fly to Germany to be with him, Ramona struggles to keep things together back home. She takes in her daughters' stepdaughter, whose mother has been arrested for drugs again. As the troubled teen struggles with her issues, Ramona tries to bond with her through baking. Ramona's mother also pitches in to help in any way she can but she is only human and makes her own mistakes.

It doesn't help things that Ramona feels like her father and siblings, who are all involved in the family restaurant business, are just waiting for her to fail so they can swoop in and save her. She wants to succeed on her own efforts.

This is a well constructed story with a lot of substance. It explores some deep relationship issues that occur when stressful situations overtake families. At the same time, it is very much a feel good story.

Join Ramona and her family as they work out their troubles as best they can.

Staged Reading of Sweet and Sad by Richard Nelson

Columbia Center for the Arts Brings Staged Reading of Sweet and Sad by Richard Nelson to the Civic Auditorium on Dec. 13th and 14th directed by Judie Hanel. Starring: Brenda Hering, Irene Fields, Julie Jindal, Tom Burns, Gary Young, Joe Garoutte. Written by Richard Nelson and Directed by Judie Hanel “Brilliant.” – New Yorker

“If you see (and you need to) [Richard Nelson's] soul-stirring new play, SWEET AND SAD, the odds are that you you'll experience the kind of shivery moments that come when someone articulates ideas that have been lurking in your head, unexpressed and perhaps even unrecognized.... Without ever stepping onto a soapbox, SWEET AND SAD ultimately dares to ask questions about our responses to September 11, that we might be afraid to tackle ourselves, even among friends, such as the relative definitions of victim and hero. At the same time Mr Nelson is asking us to consider what role art—and particularly theater—plays in how we assimilate the fears of loss that are always, on some level with us.”

"Looking back, I would not have changed my decision to join you. It was the right decision, and I didn't come here thinking that we would choose not to stay for longer than we have."

White went on to say that current KVH CFO Leslie Hiebert has been selected by the KVH
